NOTES

Slip-Resistance: Some collections indicate a rating alongside the surface type. The SRV (slip resistant value) rating is derived from NZ accredited testing providers, however the R rating is an international rating and is an indicative comparative for surface slip-resistance. The higher the rating, the greater the slip resistance. If unsure of application or required resistance levels, please check with your builder, architect or local building authority.

Faces: This denotes the amount of variation seen across the tile design with each tile offering a different print face. Stronger patterns typically have more faces, enhancing the natural effect across installation.

WHY CHOOSE TILES?

Purchasing a new house is a big decision and they become one of our most valuable assets, so it makes sense to take careful consideration when selecting the products that finish it.

There are so many options it can be difficult to know what is the best option to take your new house and turn it into a home, however when considering surfaces it's hard to look past tiles for a number of important reasons.

EASE OF MAINTENANCE

The flooring options of today need to facilitate a dynamic and busy lifestyle. While no option remains completely maintenance free, tiles are about as good as it gets; they only require light and regular cleaning, and remains impervious to water and stains helping maintain a beautiful and practical floor for a lifetime.

COST EFFECTIVE

When considering initial installation costs, maintenance expenses, and potential removal or remedial costs for each option over its entire life cycle, tiles remain one of the most cost-effective flooring surfaces on the market today.

VARIETY AND ADAPTABILITY

There is a tile option for nearly any application, your imagination and creativity are your only limitations when it comes to installation. As trends change and other flooring types fall in and out of favour, tile continues to stay in the forefront of technology to offer unmatched versatility and design.

DURABILITY

From ancient empires to modern mansions, tiles remain one of the most popular flooring options because of their incredible durability; a tile's lifetime can span generations, and when compared to other flooring types last up to five times longer. Thanks to their resistance to any fading, water or staining, pet activity, and general wear – tiles still remain unmatched in performance today.

HEALTH BENEFITS

We need to consider how surfaces in our homes can contribute to our well-being – tile creates a healthy living space because it is inhospitable to bacteria and contains no plastics, allergens, or similar dangerous contaminants that can be found in many other floor and wall surfaces.

SUSTAINABILITY

When looking for a sustainable option, consider tiles – the manufacturing process is extremely efficient and often uses recycled materials alongside other natural materials that don't harm the environment. They are easily produced, can be recycled, and can also be cleaned and maintained without the use of any toxic chemicals.
